

Robert McMahon, Ralph D. Mershon Professor of History, asks Robert Rubinstein a question after Rubinstein spoke about the challenges of peacekeeping and what he believes the future holds for peacekeeping practices.

Dorothy Noyes, Associate Professor of English, Comparative Studies, and Anthropology at The Ohio State University introduces Robert Rubinstein, Professor of Anthropology and International Relations at Syracuse University for his talk at the Mershon Center on October 8, 2010

Robert Rubinstein, Professor of Anthropology and International Relations at Syracuse University, is an anthropologist with expertise in political and medical anthropology and in social science history and research methods. His event addressed the question, "Back to the Future?: Peacekeeping and the Return of Imperial Policing."

Over 40 people came to listen to Robert Rubinstein speak at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies during the lunch hour. His discussion addressed his concern for the future of peacekeeping missions. Morgan Liu, Assistant Professor of Near Eastern Languages & Culture and Anthropology at The Ohio State University asks a question about his talk.